

The below example was for a blog entry. Note that I suggested the new final sentence, and the suggestion was accepted.

before:

Modern-primitive Jesse Fuller wrote "San Francisco Bay Blues". The song has since been covered by everybody from Paul McCartney to Bob Dylan. Fuller rocked a homemade rig that enabled him to play 5 different instruments simultaneously. When he played The Fillmore Auditorium in 1967, he pinned the rustic funk meter to the wall leaving the blues purist weirdos scratching their heads- legend has it he nearly started a riot. After he played his last song he tap danced off the stage. Every Jesse Fuller gig was a a commercial for The cognitive-enhancing properties of amphetamine. People who witnessed him say there was enough energy coming off of Jesse Fuller to electrocute a cat. San Francisco Bay Blues is a classic.

after:

People who witnessed Jesse Fuller onstage say there was enough energy coming off him to electrocute a cat. A modern-primitive, Fuller rocked a homemade rig that let him play five instruments at once. AND, he wrote the classic "San Francisco Bay Blues," which has been covered by icons from Paul McCartney to Bob Dylan. When he played the Fillmore in 1967, he pinned the rustic funk meter to the wall and left the blues purists scratching their heads. Legend has it he nearly started a riot before tap dancing his way off the stage. His like hasn't been seen since, except for maybe Carlos Guitarlos on good-bad day . . .